Dear Mr. Rogalski,

Here is a good advice for you and your superiors and for the U.S. Attorney General because I read somewhere in the Justice Manual if I recall correctly that when foreign higher level officials are involved, the U.S. Attorney General should be notify, shouldn't he?

Considering this case could potentially as far as the French President, but for sure it currently goes as far as the former French Minister of Justice, Nicole Belloubet, and for the record, the previous one also, Jean-Jacques Urvoas and his chief of staff Thomas Andrieu... anyway, I believe that the U.S. Attorney General must have already been notified. Check the FCPA regulations.

Anyway, think about the fraudster Lance Armstrong and how everyone thought he was a hero winning so many times the Tour de France while he was in fact cheating.

McDonald's Corporation is to the fast food industry what Lance Armstrong was to cycling: a fraud!

https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/2003\_Tour\_de\_France

If you look at the final general classification for the 2003 edition, you will see that the fraudster Lance Armstrong won with a time of 83h 41' 12".

Some people will argue other cyclists cheated. But, did everyone cheat? Of course not! If you look at the final general classification and you look at the bottom 20 cyclists, you will see this:

128 Koos Moerenhout (NED) Lotto–Domo + 3h 38' 38"
129 Damien Nazon (FRA) Brioches La Boulangère + 3h 39' 58"
130 Maryan Hary (FRA) Brioches La Boulangère + 3h 40' 55"
131 Christophe Edaleine (FRA) Jean Delatour + 3h 45' 18"
132 Leon van Bon (NED) Lotto–Domo + 3h 51' 56"
133 Bradley McGee (AUS) FDJeux.com + 3h 52' 49"
134 Paolo Bossoni (ITA) Vini Caldirola–So.di + 3h 54' 39"
135 Jean-Patrick Nazon (FRA) Jean Delatour + 3h 56' 38"
136 Thomas Liese (GER) Team Bianchi + 3h 56' 49"
137 Frédéric Finot (FRA) Jean Delatour + 3h 57' 53"
138 Sébastien Hinault (FRA) Crédit Agricole + 4h 00' 26"
139 David Munoz (ESP) Kelme–Costa Blanca + 4h 03' 40"
140 Baden Cooke (AUS) FDJeux.com + 4h 04' 10"
141 Samuel Dumoulin (FRA) Jean Delatour + 4h 04' 59"
142 Julian Usano (ESP) Kelme–Costa Blanca + 4h 05' 46"
143 Robbie McEwen (AUS) Lotto–Domo + 4h 13' 28"
144 Dario Andriotto (ITA) Vini Caldirola–So.di + 4h 14' 48"
145 Daniel Becke (GER) Team Bianchi + 4h 26' 08"
146 Alessandro Bertolini (ITA) Alessio + 4h 27' 59"
147 Hans De Clercq (BEL) Lotto–Domo + 4h 48' 35"

Fraudster Lance Armstrong won with a time of 83h 41' 12". It took for the bottom 20 cyclists about 5% more time than it did for fraudster Lance Armstrong.

A few percentage points might seem insignificant but it's not.

In a very competitive industry as the restaurant industry, the main reason McDonald's market capitalization is 200 billion USD is that for decades, they've engaged in a pattern of racketeering activity which is ongoing to that day since they never paid any penalties nor fines nor did they return the money or honor their contracts for the frauds they've committed, frauds followed by money laundering.

McDonald's Corporation is a criminal enterprise.

Look at this article I found today, and there were many other articles I had read in the past which brag about how smart

McDonald's was with their sweepstakes which actually is a real fraud:

<https://www.linkedin.com/pulse/mcdonalds-monopoly-promotional-masterclass-rob-verheul/>

“There's a few other subtle things that McDonald's do in order to get the confidence of their customers and generate the winning feeling that helps to keep people coming back even when they don't win the first time (or second, or third).” (I emphasize)

Can you believe that?

It's disgusting 🤢🤢🤢🤢

Please Mr. Rogalski and everyone else at the State Department and the Justice Department: take this criminal enterprise down and don't allow them to get back into business until they fully pay their entire debt to society and people and competitors and countries. To be honest, I think they are bankrupt.

Remember, every time you think about the criminal entity McDonald's Corporation, think about the criminal Lance Armstrong. Fact.

Best regards,

Vincent Le Corre
